Cross River Rail chief executive Graeme Newton says the project will transform Brisbane. Robert Shakespeare

by Mark Ludlow

The man in charge of building Brisbane's biggest infrastructure project, the $5.4 billion Cross River Rail, has said he has learnt the lessons from the infrastructure delivery of big rail projects in Sydney and Melbourne and will deliver it on time and on budget.

Cross River Rail chief executive Graeme Newton, the former boss of the $12 billion Queensland Reconstruction Authority, which helped rebuild the state after natural disasters, said the major delivery of contracts for the 10.2 kilometre rail duplication would be locked in by mid-2019.

After a decade of uncertainty under successive state governments over whether the project would proceed - and who would pay for it - Mr Newton wants to focus on the future for the project he says will transform the Queensland capital.

The Cross River Rail will provide a crucial underground river crossing - 35 metres below the surface - and is aiming to unblock the commuter bottleneck in a city that is almost more renowned for its sporadic development than its brown snake-like river.

"Cross River Rail is about the context of the city and its development. It will help turbocharge other developments in the city. By 2025, the whole face of Brisbane will have changed," Mr Newton told The Australian Financial Review.

"People were still a little bit sceptical about this project last year and this time last year we had an election campaign and it was only the second last day of the campaign when the [Liberal National Party] Opposition said they would proceed with the project subject to timing, but now we are getting on the front foot and industry is behind us."

Cross River Rail is part of a $15 billion infrastructure boom in Brisbane over the next five years that includes Star Entertainment Group's $2 billion Queen's Wharf integrated resort and casino, the Howard Smith wharves redevelopment and Brisbane's new runway.

The Palaszczuk Labor government is hoping to use the Cross River Rail project to undertake redevelopment in Woolloongabba in Brisbane's south, near the famous Gabba sporting ground, and the eye-sore Roma Street transit centre, which they are hoping to turn into a 17,000-seat entertainment stadium. The Brisbane City Council's $944 million Metro project will also link with the Cross River Rail.

Long wait

The state Labor government waited for years for the federal government to step up to contribute funding the project, which will also be delivered in part as a public-private partnership. After argy-bargy with the federal Coalition government, the Palaszczuk government finally bit the bullet last year and announced it would fund it on its own.

Treasurer Jackie Trad has committed $2.8 billion over the next four years to Cross River Rail, with the remaining to come from the private sector as well as government contributions. Federal Opposition Leader Bill Shorten has also committed a future Labor government to $2.24 billion, which will help replace some state funding.

The three major contracts for the Cross River Rail include the Tunnel, Stations and Development public-private partnership (which is essentially the greenfield tunnels and the stations), the Rail, Integration and Systems alliance (connecting into the existing Queensland Rail network) and the $625 million European Control Signalling project. They are expected to be finalised early next year.

The three main consortiums short-listed for the tunnel construction include a CIMIC Group-led consortium called Pulse (which includes Pacific Partnerships, CPB Contractors, UGL, BAM, Ghella and DIF), the Qonnect group of QIC, Capella Capital, Lendlease, John Holland and Bouygues as well as the CentriQ Partnerships consortium of Plenary Group, Acciona, GS Engineering and Construction, Salini Impreglio and Spotless Group.

With big consortiums also involved in Sydney and Melbourne Metro projects - which are a few years ahead of Brisbane - Mr Newton was initially worried about whether the depth of talent in bidding teams would stretch to Brisbane's Cross River Rail.

But with bid teams of more than 150 people, Mr Newton is confident their expertise will deliver a project that will learn the lessons from their southern neighbours, including problems with Sydney's trouble-ridden light rail project. He said there would be a much more "engaged and interactive process" with bidders to avoid problems down the track.

"You do have a degree of trepidation because of what's happening in Sydney and Melbourne, but there has been a lot of engagement with bidders. Normally in a field of three you do have one who is not cutting the mustard, but we are happy with all three. There is a strong appetite for this project," he said.

"We are like a closer follower of the Sydney and Melbourne projects so we are getting a lot of the lessons learned from their projects and implementing them here."

This is South East Queensland's number one infrastructure project - that's why Labor is making it a priority.

This will allow more trains, more often. It will take cars off the road and get traffic moving. And it will provide a major boost to the economy - with 7700 jobs in the construction phase alone, and 550 ongoing operating jobs.

Labor will partner with the Queensland Government on the project, which will build a new 10.2 kilometre north-south passenger rail line from Bowen Hills to Dutton Park.

The project will incorporate 5.9 kilometres of tunnelling under the Brisbane River and CBD, as well as four new underground stations constructed at Boggo Road, Woolloongabba, Albert Street and Roma Street, and the upgrade of the existing Dutton Park and Exhibition stations.

When completed, the Cross River Rail will remove current bottlenecks by doubling the capacity across the River and allowing more trains to run more often - along every major train line.

And it will mean commuters spend less time in transit and more time doing the things that are important to them. Passengers will save 15 minutes commuting from Beenleigh or the Gold Coast to the Southern CNB.

This is a critical project for South East Queensland's future - with the population of the region forecast to grow from 3.5 million today to 4.9 million in 2036, investment in good infrastructure is critical.

Demand for passenger rail services is forecast to almost triple by 2036, and passenger train lines are already currently over capacity.

Failure to build the cross river rail will severely limit the region's ability to grow, and will put more pressure on already congested roads.

Only an out-of-touch prime minister would ignore the critical need for investment in public transport infrastructure.

South East Queensland is crying out for investment in this project - but Mr Turnbull has been ignoring it. He hasn't put in a dollar of Federal funding to get construction off the ground.

Labor knows that the solution to South East Queensland's congestion issues is more roads and more rail - that's why a Shorten Labor Government will build both.

In addition to this $2.24 billion commitment to Cross River Rail, a Shorten Labor Government will invest $1 billion to widen the M1 from Eight Mile Plains to Daisy Hill to eight lanes as well as widening the M1 to six lanes from Varsity Lakes to Tugun.

In supporting the M1 upgrade but ignoring the Cross River Rail Project, Mr Turnbull and the LNP are only doing half the job. This will result in Queenslanders spending more time on a train platform or stuck in traffic.

Only Labor will build more roads and more rail - boosting infrastructure, creating jobs and cutting travel times for Queenslanders.

Benefits of the project:

- The CRR will double public transport capacity across the river into Brisbane CBD from the south, providing ultimate capacity for 24 rail services per hour in each direction.
- There will be a 22% reduction in train crowding by 2036.
- It will increase daily public transport patronage in 2026 by 9,000 passengers and 23,000 passengers in 2036.
- CRR will reduce private vehicle kilometres travelled by 526,000km per day - (a 24 per cent decrease in daily crowded hours in 2026 and 29 per cent in 2036)
- It will provide faster, more reliable travel times across South East Queensland, including to and from the Gold Coast and the Sunshine Coast.
